The scene at the ambassador's house resembled a glittering spectacle of mid-Victorian days. All the men, with the exception of Chief Justice Taft, were attired in knee breeches, and the British guests carried jeweled swords. Many decorations and foreign insignia were worn, and the Prime Minister and some of his associates arrived in Napoleonic cocked hats.

The women were resplendent in shimmering robes of gold and silver, the Americans vicing with their English sisters in the beauty and lavishness of their jewels, diamond tiaras, ropes of pearls and rings of rare beauty. The Queen were a robe of aliver brocade, with gorgeous diamond head dress.
